

Peace Poem

- Alix Segil

If I could paint the world, it would be a palette of rainbow. Where yellow or black, brown or white would have a place from the start.

If I could write a story, it would tell a life without villains and lowlifes. It would be full of heroes like Atticus Finch, Ellie Wiesel and Martin Luther King.

If I could build a house, it would be filled with doors to welcome anybody. Rich or poor, short or tall, they have a place among us all.

If I could rule the world, I would erase war, hate, violence. Impossible to believe and see. But this is the key: believe and dream.
